JOHN WILSON HAD A NARROW ESCAPE

The boat which was cut in two and destroyed by the steamer Claudine or Saturday, was one in which were John Wilson of Pelekunu, Molokai, two ba bies and several women, the entire party including the boatmen, numbering thirteen. The boat was in charge of a native boat-steerer, who has only one hand, but he is an adept in boat-

Wilson was being taken out to board the Claudine off Keanae Point, Maui There was a heavy swell on. The boats were headed for each other. The sailrun parallel with the steamer. When close to the steamer a heavy swell suddenly shot the boat directly in front of the bow of the Claudine. Down came the bow on the boat, smashing it, and carrying it under.

"When I came to my senses," said Wilson, "I was down under the Claudine's bilge. I tried to get out, but seemed to be caught. I worked and worked and it seemed an hour before my head came above the surface. Then I struck away from the steamer fearing that I would get sucked under by the propeller. Then I saw the boatsteerer, and at the same time saw what looked to be a bundle of pink clothes, but it was one of the children. The boat-steerer struck out first, and then one of the Claudine's sailors, Snowball is his name, dived over and went after the other child. The boat-steerer caught the child under his left arm, and struck out for the Claudine swimming with his other arm, from which a hand was missing. A rope was thrown to him which he caught on the stump of his arm and then passed it to his teeth, finally taking several turns around his body, and in this way he was hauled up to the deck.

"It was a narrow escape all around, but nobody, strange to say, was drowned."

MONTEREY'S RUDDER DAMAGED

While making ready to go to sea esterday afternoon the tug Dauntless, having the oil-barge Monterey in tow, became tangled up in the railway slip, and the Monterey was driven sternwards into the wharf. The result was that her steering gear was smashed. The damage, will necessitate about three days' lay-up of the two vessels while repairs are being made.

CAPT. LYON IS

Capt. H. W. Lyon, commandant of the Honolulu Naval Station, will return from Manila on the 18th inst. On the same vessel will be Admiral Miller and Capt. Drake, who also served on the court-martial which was convened to try the navigating officer of the Baltimore, for running her aground near Singapore. These officers go to San Francisco.
